

Temperance Column.

EDITED BY J. W. SIMS.

Local Option—once more.

Below I copy some portions of a sermon preached by Rev. A. M. Hill of Ravenna, on local option. It is impossible to do justice to the sermon by a few extracts, but it is too long to publish in this column, so I shall have to content myself by copying a few of the gems that sparkle all through the discourse. He sketches the situation at the present time with a master hand, and the work which the Christian women of our State have done in the last few years in the cause of temperance, and closes with a warning word to our Legislators, not to treat with contempt the expressed wishes of so large a portion of the people of this State, on the subject of local option on the basis of woman suffrage. I confess to a feeling of disappointment at the action of our Legislature up to this time, dodging the issue that must be met sometime in this decade, and the sooner it is done, the better it will be for State and Nation. There is a wide difference between a statesman and a politician, one who never looks beyond the success of his party in the political contests of the day. The present Legislature have it in their power to pass a law that is just in its provisions that will bring no one engaged in honorable business, and which thousands of the best men and women in the State have petitioned for. There is no mistaking the signs of the times; an enlightened public sentiment is fast rising up to the level of the needs of the hour, and the time is coming when the temperance element will be strong enough to command the respect of political parties, and it may be well for our law makers to remember that in a Republican government the source of all power lies with the people, and if a member elected by their neglect or refusal to carry out their expressed wishes, there is good reason to expect that his constituents will, sooner or later, invite him to stay at home. If the temperance men and women will only hold the ground they can gain from day to day working in season and out of season, I see no reason to fear for the final triumph of the principles so dear to their hearts. To this end let us only persevere in our battle and let wisdom direct every movement, and let every word and every action tell on the side of truth and of right. There is no need of discouragement, for the influence of temperance workers is felt all over our land, a great advance having been made all along the lines in the last ten years, and we must work on, and keep praying as we go, and keep our powder dry for offensive as well as defensive warfare.

The Liquor Dealers' Association complain that the women of this State are carrying the war right home, and they, as a matter of self defense, will be obliged to defend themselves and their traffic from the assaults of the Crusaders. I do not expect a local option law will be passed this year, but it will not be many years distant, for I have a firm and abiding faith in the ultimate triumph of right over wrong, and of truth over error. Present action on this subject is delayed, because the moral cowardice of some of our law makers, but it will come in time. Let us watch and work, and wait, for we think we see the dawning of the morning of a better day. Let us to the work, and the words of an earnest Christian minister on this great question of the day:

"Oh, this liquor traffic is more costly than wars, more destructive than famines, more deadly than plagues, more ruinous than pestilence, poverty, disease and crime; it deadens all the moral faculties, stifles reverence, purity, truthfulness, faith, hope and love, and inflames all the worst passions of the soul. It undermines religion, plucks at the church, invades the social and family circles, and everywhere scatters sin, and misery, and sickness and death. It cuts down youth in its vigor, maimed in its strength, and age in its weakness; it enervates the moral faculties, engenders selfishness, blots out filial attachment, blights parental hope, and brings down mourning age with sorrow to the grave."

In the name of all that is pure and holy and dear to our hearts, we may well exclaim, how does it happen that this monster evil is thus permitted to tyrannize over a Christian people? The answer to the question we give with feelings of shame. It is because men are so marred in the members of evil appetites, and so hampered by the love of gain, and so weakened by cowardice, and so tied by business interests, and political ambition, that they do not heed the counsel of judgment, and the voice of conscience, and march together in irrepressible columns, and yet this enemy down. Some are morally paralyzed by an enslaving love of the cup; others are in trade, and are afraid of offending and losing customers from whom they expect to make a few dollars; others hold office in city or county, or district, or State, and are afraid of hearing the ire and opposition of those whose money and time are invested in this traffic of human ruin; others want office and bid for the support of the liquor interest. Ah! How much they bid for it! Even their principles and their consciences, and the holiest convictions of their souls. And so it comes about through the acquiescence, or the apathy, or the ignorance, or the selfishness, or the cowardice of men, that this evil is not banished, but rather thrives at the expense of the purity, and virtue, and manhood, and religion, and national prosperity—in short, at the expense of every human interest for which man should live or die. What an evaluating disaster to humanity, as to our nation, people, and sentiment! We should be so sure to exist, eye, as to become, and defend, and protect a traffic which is the ally of all wickedness, the most fruitful parent of crime, and the mother of woe. Alas, that they have not done what should be done for humanity and for Christ, and God, in his own peculiar way has been calling efficient help to the front to assist them. By the sounding of the Holy Ghost in the ears of the Crusade, God has laid upon a woman, saying, 'Awake, awake Deborah, and a host of Deborahs have been awake ever since, busily preparing God's people for a final and complete victory over this destroying evil. They have heard the divine command, 'Make a chain,' and across this and other States, they have stretched a chain of temperance organizations, praying bands, friendly inns, unions, a golden chain of fervent prayer and sacred song and Christian love, which is securely binding all true hearts into a blessed union of endeavor and a Christ-like sympathy for afflicted humanity. They have scattered over the land printed intelligence on the subject of temperance, items, facts, figures, pamphlets, papers, books, in number, like the falling leaves of the Autumn forest; with lips touched by the purifying fire, and sanctified by prayer, they have delivered more temperance addresses, and better more persuasive arguments, and more fervent appeals than were ever made before.

Blue Men.

New York Times.

Nature has made white, black, yellow, red, and brown men, but she has reserved the rest of her palette for objects other than men. She uses enormous quantities of green in painting her grass and her trees, but she has never given us a green man. One of her most popular and successful birds is the bluebird, but she has never tried the experiment of making a blue woman. Such blue persons as we may meet from time to time are the work of art, not of nature; and they are universally regarded as uncalled for and inexcusable.

Occasionally a man of a deep-blue complexion makes his appearance in public and attracts general and unfavorable comment. Old New Yorkers will remember the blue man who, twenty-five years ago, was contemporary with those now vanished institutions, the 'Lime-kiln Man,' and 'Four-cent Man.' People said that the blues of the 'Blue Man' was due to his excessive use of nitrate of silver, and there were few who took the trouble to question this explanation. But who, on reflection, ever is addicted to nitrate of silver, either as a beverage or an article of diet? Used in either way it would be hotter than the soup at a railway restaurant—far too hot, in fact, to be assimilated by any one but a salamander. Still, it is possible, that in some obscure scientific way, nitrate of silver can be introduced into the human stomach, with the blue consequences popularly attributed to it. There is, however, a blue man now living in the suburbs of St. Louis, who never looked upon nitrate of silver, and the origin of whose blue skin is perfectly well known to a wide circle of his townsmen. The story of this unfortunate man suggests a possible explanation of all other casual blue men who have from time to time appeared in different parts of the country.

Everybody in east St. Louis knows, by reputation, Mr. Kellner of Kellner & Schwarz, the eminent dyer. He is a worthy but obscure man, and is of poor, but German origin. When he once receives a prejudice against a man, he can never be induced to overcome it. Long ago he conceived a most violent prejudice against Mr. Walker, who is, according to the testimony of his friends, a really unobjectionable young man. The facts seem to be that Mr. Walker some years ago, was overheard by Mr. Kellner, in the act of speaking in disrespectful terms of the town, an instrument to which Mr. Kellner has been for years unhappily and habitually addicted. Greatly outraged by what he considered an indirect attack on his reputation, Mr. Kellner indignantly told Mr. Walker that he was a scoundrel, and forbade him ever to cross his threshold.

This prohibition was an extremely painful thing to Mr. Walker. He had been for some months a warm admirer of Miss Kellner, and had been accustomed to spend three evenings in a week in her society. Knowing the inexorable character of the dyer, he foresaw that he must either abandon the young lady altogether, or resort to strategy and deception. Being naturally straightforward and honest, he was greatly distressed, but he yielded to necessity and the imperious nature of his passion.

In accordance with a system of clandestine interviews under cover of darkness, in the back yard, Mr. Walker met the dyer's daughter three weeks ago, at about nine o'clock in the evening. The latter had secretly issued from the back door, and her lover was waiting for her under the shadow of the projecting eaves of the wash-house. A large tub and a long plank happened to be conveniently at hand, and, placing the plank across the tub, the youthful pair sat down to sweet converse. The plank was a half-inch one, and seemed to be sufficiently strong to bear the weight of two persons, with a large margin of safety. When, however, the weight of Mr. Walker and Miss Kellner was concentrated on the precarious center of the plank—that is to say, immediately over the middle of the tub—a contingency which the maker of the plank had not in view, occurred. The plank first bent and then broke, and Mr. Walker, falling backward, was plunged head and shoulders in the contents of the tub. With great presence of mind he kept the young lady's head out of danger, but he could not prevent her from assuming a sitting position with her lap partly submerged.

The moment the unfortunate lovers affected their release, the lady fled into the house and Mr. Walker climbed the fence, the charge from old Mr. Kellner's shot-gun happily falling to his feet. He went home as soon as he had lit the gas, he was horrified to find that his face, hair, neck, and hands were dyed a deep and brilliant blue. When he realized the fact that he had fallen into a tub full of Mr. Kellner's 'Indestructible Ultramarine Blue,' he fell back upon a chair, feeling that he was a ruined man.

Of course, he tried every means to wash away the stain, but soap and hot water were in vain. He remembered Mr. Kellner's boast, that his dye could not be washed out, and he gave up the attempt. He sought out a high-class friend, a dyer familiar with water-colors, and implored his aid. The friend could give him no hope. He died, indeed, to offer Mr. Walker's face with a film of transparent yellow, which would have the effect of changing his tint from blue to a deep and beautiful green, but this handsome offer was declined. So, too, Mr. Walker refused to sell to Mr. Kellner and ask him for some oil which would remove the blue. He thought he had been too imprudent. Mr. Kellner in an indiscreet though innocent act. Mr. Walker preferred to go to a blue and lonely grave rather than to incur the slightest risk of injuring the reputation of his adored one.

Physicians are divided in opinion as to whether Mr. Walker will fade in course of years. So far, his color is pre-eminently fast, and neither water, sun-light, nor sulphur and has the slightest effect upon it. Fortunately, Mr. Kellner has never learned the truth, and imagines that Mr. Walker has left town, driven away by remorse for having humiliated the town-belle. The story is, of course, a very melodramatic one, but it is a sad and a painful one, and it is a warning to all who are tempted by the promises of a possible origin of all contemporary blue men, that they should attend to the attention of chemists and anthropologists.

Renovating Old Lands.

American Cultivator.

Clover growing is almost universally acknowledged to be the best and cheapest method of renovating our worn-out lands. Many farmers in this very town have been successful in this way. It is not wholly through the use of clover and plaster. Barnyard manure is always good for the land, while of the commercial fertilizers any of them may in special cases prove of no benefit. By using the former we return to the soil the refuse of the same vegetation previously removed from it; while through the use of the latter we may, perchance, restore some ingredient in which the soil is deficient, or, on the other hand, we may fail to add anything actually required by the land.

For the general purpose of reclaiming worn-out lands, we must admit that barnyard manure stands at the head of the list; but its supply is necessarily limited. Aside from the unreliability of some commercial fertilizers, their use in large quantities is too expensive for average farmers. The cheapest method available to all is the practice of green manuring. I have usually resorted to clover as the best crop to raise for this purpose. Of late, however, clover growing has been rather uncertain, leading me to investigate the results of other green crops for use in a similar way.

My success has been very gratifying in sowing corn, oats, buckwheat, or rye, for plowing under, instead of clover. For this purpose I use one or the other of the crops, according to the time of the year, for sowing, and taking into the calculation the length of time the crop should occupy the land. All these crops, however, could be grown and plowed under within the time required for growing the one crop of clover. In this consists the main advantage of their use over clover as a renovating crop.

Of the crops above mentioned I saw corn or buckwheat for a summer growth, resorting to them only occasionally, as by reason of the failure of some regular farm crop in its course. Rye or oats can often be sown in August or September, after the harvesting of a regular crop, with ample time for growing a heavy crop for green manuring the land before the latter is wanted for the next regular farm crop. For this purpose, immediately after harvest, I take all the stubble-ground that is not needed to clover, cultivating it so as to sow rye or oats; the former if it is not to be plowed under until the following spring, the latter if only a fall growth is desired. For late sowing, oats will make a much heavier and quicker growth than any other grain, the cool, moist fall weather appearing to favor it. After harvesting any piece of early corn or potatoes, I remove the ground again as soon as possible, with some crop for green manuring. With my regular field crop I often sow rye, at the last time of cultivating the corn, the rye often growing so rank after the corn is taken off, as to need fall pasturing to keep it down properly.

Such seedling as is recommended above will cost but a trifle, since the waste of any stubble-land is half enough to re-seed it. After potato digging, especially, the ground will need very little more tillage. In the case of the corn-field, there only remains the expense of seed and sowing rye. In all these operations the extra tillage required is more than repaid by draining the land of all weeds and thistles at the time the year when they will be readily. Again, the soil is put in a light and porous condition for receiving, and being benefited by the fall rains. Finally, the growing of any of these crops in the summer described more than repays the light attendant expense, though the preoccupation of the land with a clean, luxuriant growth, instead of permitting it to lie bare or occupied with some low growth, which can only be a damage to the land, if need not add—that which will be admitted by all intelligent farmers—the plowing under of a heavy vegetable growth from any of these crops will be of great benefit to the lands thus treated.

IMPROVE THE FARM.—If the farmer improves his farm he improves his financial condition. The more valuable he makes it, the more his capital stock is increased; the less he will have to borrow, and when he dies, the larger will be the patrimony he leaves his family. Fix up the old home then. Clean out the fence corners. Destroy the noxious weeds. Grub out the hedges and thistles. Burn out the stumps. Clean off the logs and stones. Make a paradise on earth of your farm, for you are not to live on it while you remain on earth, and will not your family live on it when you lie in your grave-yard? Plant out your orchards, so that your family may enjoy the good fruit that you had the foresight and energy to provide for them.

A Maine farmer gives the following opinion as to the best position to plant an orchard: "Were I to plant an orchard I would locate it on a hill, one in a valley surrounded by hills, except on the south side, and the other on a high elevation exposed to prevailing winds. I would choose the latter in preference to the former. The south side is good in regard to peach orchards. A great object is to keep back the bloom as long as possible, and this can best be done in northern exposures without shelter."

Lawrence, Mass. American.

The New York Herald has made a nearly complete canvass of the members of the two branches of the Massachusetts Legislature, to ascertain the Presidential preferences. President Bishop of the Senate is for Sherman, and speaker Noyes of the House, for Grant. In the Republican members of the two branches, the first choice of 41 is Grant, 37 Blaine, 37 Edwards, 33 Sherman, 31 Washburn, 15 Hayes and 6 Garfield. Of the Democrats, 21 for Haywood, 16 for Tilden, 15 for Cleveland, 13 for Thurman, 12 for Blaine, 11 for Sherman, 10 for McKinley and 9 for Davis. Concerning the Lawrence members, the Herald says: "Senator Andrew C. Stone is a rising young lawyer of Lawrence, a shrewd politician, worker and a stalwart of the most pronounced type. He said, 'I am for the ex-President first, and always. I believe he is the man for the hour, and he will be nominated, and triumphantly elected. The people want Grant, and they will have him.' Representative Pease is put down for Washburn."
